A-State Gives Back

Courtesy of Amy Clay-Thomas

Amy Clay-Thomas of Hardy, economics and pre-law sophomore, and Kelly Cooper of Melbourne, freshman, undecided major, hold up their sorority symbol after Saturday's Color Run.

Courtesy of Rachel Simmons

Rachel Simmons of Searcy, economics and pre-law sophomore, and Brannen Tipton of Batesville, freshman dietetics major and Lambda Chi Alpha member, celebrate after finishing the inaugural Color Run held at A-State Oct. 10.

Kyle Fouts|Staff Photographer

Participants in Lambda Chi Alpha's first ever Color Run toss handfuls of multi-colored powder into the air before the race begins. Proceeds from the event will benefit the Arkansas Children's Hospital in Little Rock.

Lambda Chi Alpha and A-State United Way both held charity events last week for the children of Arkansas. Lambda Chi sponsored A-State's first ever Color Run to benefit the Arkansas Children's Hospital on Oct. 6. Later, United Way held dance-a-thon that lasted from 9 p.m. until 3 a.m. on Oct. 9. And all proceeds went to youth educational programs. During the night they held a silent disco portion where the participants wore wireless headphones that pumped the DJ's music into them. United Way was able to raise $6,975 and Lambda Chi raised $10,000.

Emily Holder|Staff Photographer

A synchronized dance routine was performed by Kappa Sigmas Friday night at the event "United We Dance" in hopes of winning the competition.

Emily Holder| Staff Photographer

A-State students enjoy a night of dancing for cause at the "United We Dance" event held in the Red Wolf Center Friday night

Emily Holder|Staff Photographer

Sophomore Travis McCloskey changes the song on his headphones at the "United We Dance" event held at the Red Wolf Center.

Brett Whitman|Staff Photographer

Junior Shane Black of Trumann dances to the music in his headphones during the Silent Disco portion.

Emily Holder|Staff Photographer

A-State students raised $6,957 for children's education programs in Northeast Arkansas at the first ever "United We Dance" event.