

Everything but the game

Brett Whitman | Staff Photographer

The student section yells "Arkansas State" during Saturday's game against Georgia State on Oct. 31. Many fans and students dressed up in their best costumes for this game that landed on Halloween.

Sarah Thompson | Staff Photographer

The Red Wolves dancers perform to "Thriller" in honor of Halloween during the game against Georgia State. They also performed a spooky number after the third quarter of the game.

Everyone in the South loves going to cheer on their favorite team on Saturday nights, but there is more going on at the games besides just football. The fans cheering them on is one of the biggest things you see on those fall nights. Most of the fans are more into the game, than even the players. They yell, celebrate, dance and even boo throughout the game. During half-time you see even more with the band marching to their most recent competition show. You see the dance team and cheerleaders performing their routines for hundreds to see, for their entertainment. There is so much to see besides just football at these games. To see more photos go to The Herald's website, astateherald.com.

Brett Whitman | Staff Photographer

Howl waves an Arkansas State Red Wolves Flag while dressed as Captain America during Saturday's game against Georgia State.

Jorge Quiquívix | Contributing Editor

The Sound of Natural State let their Halloween Spirit show during the Georgia State game on Oct. 31, by dressing up in different costumes.

Jorge Quiquívix | Contributing Editor

Redshirt Freshman Quarterback James Tabary meets with fans and gives them autographs after the victory against Georgia State. The Red Wolves defeated the Panthers that night 48-34.