

Behind the Scenes

Nikki Logan | Staff Photographer

The Arkansas State Theatre Department practices a full run-through of their play "Trojan Women" on Nov. 11 in Riceland Hall of the Fowler Center.

Chelsea Hays | Photo Editor

Chorus member Emma Watkins, sophomore theatre major from Jonesboro, twirls her sash as she awaits her stage directions.

Chelsea Hays | Photo Editor

Chorus member Morgan Carvell, senior theatre major from Bentonville, dances in the smoke across stage during the theatre's dress rehearsal.

Chelsea Hays | Photo Editor

Director Lisa Bohn, assistant professor of theatre, soaks up the essence of the stage while enjoying her time during dress rehearsal of "Trojan Women."

Chelsea Hays | Photo Editor

Molly Simpson, professor of theatre from Jonesboro, embraces her emotions and a baby doll as she practices her performance as the character Hecuba.

Nikki Logan | Staff Photographer

A couple of Trojan soldiers kick back during a recent dress rehearsal while the rest of the cast readies for a full run-through of the play "Trojan Women."

A-State theatre department brought a Greek tragedy to life on stage this week. The play "Trojan Women" told the story of what the Trojan women really went through after the Trojan War against the Greeks. While the play was a tragedy, the backstage fun was not. The cast seemed to be having a great time during the rehearsal. They were dancing around and laughing it up with each other when not on stage. The director Lisa Bohn was even joking around with her cast when not directing the scenes or fixing the falling set. To see more photos from "Trojan Women" go to The Herald website at astateherald.com.